RESIDENT TEACHING OPPORTUNITIES

A. Sophomore Pathophysiology Course (Pathology 501A & B)

All pathology residents are expected to participate in the teaching of sophomore medical students. Residents are assigned to small group laboratory sessions where they participate with faculty. Upper level residents usually teach laboratory sessions on their own as well. These sessions are chosen by mutual agreement between the Pathology Course Director and the resident involved. The indexed departmental teaching slide collection (abodia) and GRIPE photograph bank are available for resident use. If needed, additional slides may be purchased at department expense. Residents are provided with evaluation of their teaching by both students and the faculty peer review system. All teaching is supervised by the Course Directors and Department Chairman. Interval improvement in teaching abilities is an important measure of maturity as a developing pathologist.

B. Senior Medical Student Pathology Electives

Senior medical students rotate through pathology for one month electives in either Surgical Pathology or Clinical Pathology. Longer rotations can be arranged with either the Director of Surgical Pathology or the Director of the UAMS Clinical Pathology Services. Pathology residents participate in these clerkships, orienting students to the service and working together on individual cases. In addition, the department sponsors a Post-Sophomore Medical Student fellowship where incumbents perform research and services.
